the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase from 1.1 billion to 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There are a number of reasons why the world's population is increasing so rapidly. One of the main reasons is that the number of children born to each woman has increased. This is due to a number of factors, including the fact that women are now having children at a younger age, and that they are having more children than in the past.

Another reason why the world's population is increasing so rapidly is that the number of people who are surviving to old age has increased. This is due to a number of factors, including the fact that people are now living longer than in the past, and that there are now more people in the world who are over 65 years of age.

There are a number of other reasons why the world's population is increasing so rapidly, including the fact that the number of people who are migrating to other parts of the world has increased, and that there are now more people in the world who are living in urban areas.

The rapid increase in the world's population is a cause for concern, as it is likely to have a number of negative impacts on the environment and on the world's resources.

One of the main concerns is that the world's population is likely to increase to 8 billion by the year 2050. This is a significant increase, and it is likely to have a number of negative impacts on the environment and on the world's resources.

One of the main impacts of a world population of 8 billion is that there will be a significant increase in the demand for food, water, and energy. This is likely to lead to a number of problems, including food shortages, water shortages, and energy shortages.

Another impact of a world population of 8 billion is that there will be a significant increase in the demand for land. This is likely to lead to a number of problems, including deforestation, soil erosion, and the loss of biodiversity.

There are a number of other impacts of a world population of 8 billion, including the fact that there will be a significant increase in the number of people who are living in urban areas, and that there will be a significant increase in the number of people who are living in poverty.

The rapid increase in the world's population is a cause for concern, and it is important that we take action to address the problems that it is likely to cause.

There are a number of things that we can do to address the problems that a world population of 8 billion is likely to cause. One of the most important things that we can do is to reduce the number of children born to each woman.

There are a number of ways that we can reduce the number of children born to each woman. One way is to provide women with access to family planning services. This will allow women to control the size of their families, and to have children at a later age.

Another way that we can reduce the number of children born to each woman is to provide women with access to education. This will allow women to gain the skills and knowledge that they need to support a family, and to have children at a later age.

There are a number of other ways that we can reduce the number of children born to each woman, including the fact that we can provide women with access to health care, and that we can provide women with access to employment opportunities.
